The speech of Mr. Littlefield of Malne was the feature of the day yesterday. Mr. Littlefield won his spurs by his speech on the Roberts case. Yesterday he added to his laurels in a speech against the bill, which for brilliancy, wit and logic rivals the best efforts of the recognized orators of the House. He made a profound impresion, and when he concluded it was several minutes before the demonstration that followed could be quelled.

Among the others who spoke yesterday were Messrs. Jones (Va.) and Maddox (Ga.) against the bill and Messrs. Russell (Conn.), Bartholdt (Mo.), Gardner (Mich.), Lacey (Iowa) for it.

Proceeding, Mr. Littlefield argued that the regeneration of the Island of Porto Rico could be brought about by a loan, which the United States could authorize it to raise. No one could doubt the ability of the Island to repay the loan. He described how time and again in the old days the Pearl of the Antilles had made loans to Spain; not only Spain, but to Cuba and Jamaica. He told of the blood and treasure the emancipation of the slaves had cost the American republic, yet in 1873 Porto Rico had manumitted 33,000 slaves without tumult or bloodshed. The people of the island had paid $12,000,000 to free the bondmen. Could not these people, he asked, be trusted to repay a trifling loan to be used for the relief of the island. cause it will contain exhibits that appeal to all amateurs of the gun and rod—and such amateurs in all countries of the world are legion. The building has about 600 feet frontage on the Seine, while another facade overlooks the famous lena bridge, built as a souvenir of one of Napoleon's greatest victories—the bridge which the Germans were dissuaded from blowing up in 1814 when they finally reached Paris after the downfall of the great emperor. As one enters the forestry building, he will see two admirably appropriate statues, one representing "Diana Hunting" and the other "Amphitrite." Among the ornamental decorations will be some remarkable bas reliefs by young French sculptors depicting lively hunting scenes. Of the statuary I will not start to write, for at the present rate of multiplication, if the birth rates do not improve, there will one day be more inhabitants of stone and bronze in Paris than there are in flesh and blood.

Three European countries that are preparing for the exposition are Beigium, Portugal and Builgaria. Each will have a ment and hands off. They could take care of themselves. He said he believed that a loan of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 would be sufficient to place them on their feet, but the amount he was willing to leave to the people, who were to repay it. "I say," said he, "that it lies in the mouth of no man to say that Porto Rico could not repay a loan of $10,000,000 if operating under free trade in free markets. I assert that this bill is drawn against the advice of Gen. Davis, governor general of the Island, against the protest of the people of Porto Rico, against the counsel of Secretary Root, against the recommendations of the President and against the original recommendations of the chairman of the ways and means committee." Mr. Littlefield chided Mr. Payne with not making public the reasons for his change of heart. He said he thought he knew the reason, but he would not suggest it. But the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Connecticut (Russell), he said, had declared that the importation of sugar and tobacco from Porto Rico would not interfere with our industries. If that were true it would be inferesting to know who suggested the change of base. He yielded to no man in his devotion to his party, and it was better for his political friends to hear these things now than later on the stump, where they would be judged by the enlightened conscience of the American people.

The greatest calamity which over-The greatest calamity which overshadowed the republican party, he said, was the calamity involved in the pending bill (applause). Mr. Littlefield said he would waste no time in quoting Jefferson, Jackson or Benton. For him it was sufficient if Wm. McKinley had followed in the footsteps of Washington and Lincoln. And President McKinley had said that it was the "plain duty" of Congress to give free trade to Porto Rico.
Mr. Littlefield directed his sarcasm against the bill, taking as an illustration a case of shipping lumber from Maine to Porto Rico. At San Juan the duty was col-lected by the United States. Therefore, it had as well been collected by the United States when it left Maine. Was is possible, he asked, that under the doctrine of this bill Porto Rico was no longer an island. Had it been eliminated from the map of the earth?

An Unrepublican Blil. Mr. Littlefield contended that the bill was unrepublican. Whenever before had t been proposed to place a duty upon American capital and American labor, The American capital and American labor. The platforms of the republican party declared for the protection of American labor and American capital against foreign labor and foreign capital. He challenged Mr. Payne to explain this new doctrine. He also assailed as a pretext the theory that this tariff for Porto Rico was framed to raise revenue when a duty on sugar and tobacco was levied, while coffee, of which the production was greater than both the other articles together was to be imported free. This was the cheap philanthropy which cests nothing.

Another argument against the bill Mr. Littlefield found in the proclamation of General Miles to the people of Porto Rico when his army invaded the island. He had promised the natives "the immunities and blessings" of our government and they had crowned him with garlands and had kissed the flag. He would never vote, he said, to violate the pledge that great soldier had made. It had been written in the blood of our heroes and sealed by the god of battles. It could not be violated without sullying our honor and tarnishing our faith.

Mr. Littlefield then took up the legal phase of the question, and concluded as follows: "May our flag float over the whole republic, in the occident and the 10,000 islands near far-off Cathay, upon land and sea, over school, home and church, the emblem of our integrity and good faith, of liberty and freedom, of the inestimable blessings of a Christian civilization, of human rights guaranteed by the Constitution, not dependent upon the evanescent numan rights guaranteed by the Constitu-tion, not dependent upon the evanescent will of state or national legislatures too often affrighted at their own shadows, rights imbedded in the Constitution, not floating as empty bubbles on the perturbed surface of eloquent perorations, rights that are eternal and world wide, not ephe-meral and circumscribed, of opportunity,
